VOICE OF BRITISH NATIONALISM

Nationalists of Britain UNITE!

WITH UNEMPLOYMENT NOW OVER 3¼ MILLION, law and order collapsing and race trouble continuing to tear our towns and cities apart, public disillusionment with the Government and the old political parties grows stronger every day. For a brief period the Falklands War, in which our servicemen performed so magnificently, distracted public attention from the problems and failures at home. But now that the war is over the British people are preoccupied again with the daily problems of existence – existence in a declining economy, a divided society and a state of mounting industrial and civil anarchy where the state seems to offer no protection to the law-abiding citizen, whether they be the worker who wants to work or the old lady who wants to walk her neighbourhood in security and peace.

At the 1979 General Election many people thought that Mrs. Thatcher had the answer to these problems and they voted accordingly. Now they know better. The Thatcher Government's record in every sector is a disastrous one.

Because of this, the stage is now set for a massive upsurge in public support for the only political force that offers the British people hope for the future: the force of Nationalism.

UNITY IMPERATIVE

But before this upsurge can occur we British Nationalists must be united. Split into several small factions, we will not be able to give the leadership for which the people are crying out, nor supply the organisation whereby they can be mobilised into a great movement for radical change. The people may reasonably say: "All right, Nationalism is the solution. But which faction of Nationalism should we support? There seem to be so many. Why don't they combine into one?"

And of course the people would be right. The division of Nationalists into several warring factions is ridiculous. It must be ended – and it must be ended NOW!

In March of this year a number of Nationalists who previously had belonged to different factions got together and decided that the time had come to end their divisions and unite. At a conference in London they agreed to merge their separate parties and form one party, the British National Party.

EGOTISTS

When the British National Party was formed, invitations were sent to the leaders of all the significant Nationalist factions to participate in its formation. Some accepted, but some, for purely selfish and egotistical reasons, refused. The egotists were frightened that they might be consigned to a smaller place in a larger movement. Not only did they decline to take part, they tried to put pressure on their members to decline as well. Some succumbed to this pressure but many did not, and have been welcomed into the BNP.

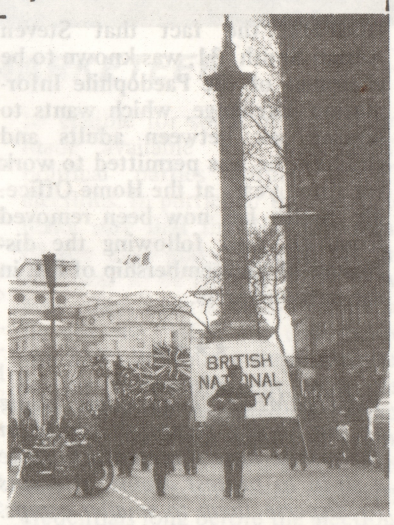
We have no hesitation in identifying the leaders who have stood in the way of unity and tried to perpetuate division: they are the leaders of the National Front and British Movement.

ON THE MARCH
Above: Nationalists on the march in 1976, a time when they were united. Below right: The British National Party, leader in Nationalist unity, marches through London last April.

With the vast majority of members of those organisations we have no quarrel and we want no conflict. To them the door is still open to come in with us and unite. We hope that they will soon realise, if they do not realise it now, that it is their leaders who are keeping Nationalists in Britain divided.

SIMPLE COURSE

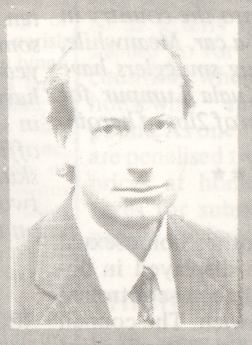
If they believe, as we do, in Nationalist unity, and if their leaders continue to maintain disunity, there is one simple course open to them: they can ditch those leaders and join up with us. With or without the little mini-Fuhrers who jealously cling to their inflated little positions in their rapidly declining factions, British Nationalism must unite forces. The cause of Nation and Race demands it. The British National Party, by giving a lead in unity, earned the right to ask for the support of all Nationalists who want the same thing. Let's do now what our duty to Britain demands that we do. Let's do what the enemies of Britain are frightened that we may do. Let's turn our backs on the little men of division. Let's form one movement and build a real force for national salvation!



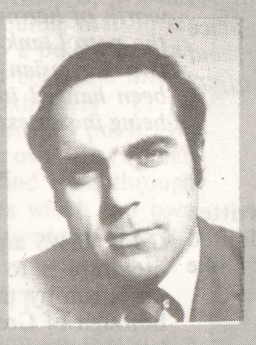
Leaders in unity

JOHN TYNDALL
Chairman of the British National Party. He led the National Front in its most successful days.

CHARLES PARKER
National Organiser of the British National Party, responsible for the party's network of branches and groups.



RICHARD EDMONDS
BNP South London Organiser and Chairman of the party's youth section.



DAVID BRUCE
North London Organiser and National Activities Organiser of the BNP.

RAY HILL
BNP Publicity Officer. Has done a lot to promote Nationalist unity.

WHITELAW MUST GO!

FOLLOWING the ease with which an intruder managed to gain access to the Queen's bedroom, the revelation that Her Majesty's personal bodyguard was a queer, and the unsavoury outcome of Operation Countryman, it is not surprising that the police in this country are in the throes of a crisis of confidence. As a result of these events they have become even more of a target of unscrupulous politicians who are eager to find scapegoats.

But the culprits are not the police, but the politicians themselves, many of whom are openly hostile to the police and do not give them the support that they deserve. Unsubstantiated allegations of police corruption made by the likes of Mr. David Steel (whose own party is hardly a paragon of virtue, as the Jeremy Thorpe trial clearly showed) and impossible recommendations made by people like Lord Scarman have done much to undermine the authority, respect and self-confidence of the police. And the recent decision by one police authority to lower educational requirements to enable coloured applicants to enter the police force is unlikely to improve matters.

The soft attitude towards violent criminals held by many politicians, including Home Secretary William Whitelaw, is not likely to inspire policemen with the conviction that they are doing a necessary or worthwhile job. And for all his huffing and puffing about "short sharp shocks" for juvenile offenders, Mr. Whitelaw has done precisely nothing to deter hardened criminals, particularly those whose aim is to destroy our British way of life. The IRA can still kill and maim with impunity, and even stage demonstrations on our streets; many criminals, like the black murderer Newton Rose, can escape punishment on the merest technicality; citizens in many areas can no longer walk the streets without the risk of being mugged or raped; and pornography, vice and drug traffic seem to be thriving.

The fact is that too many politicians are far more concerned with the welfare of criminals than they are with the plight of their victims. Though it is quite obvious that capital and corporal punishment should never have been abolished, politicians are mortally afraid to reintroduce them or to impose heavier and tougher jail sentences. In short, for far too long the Home Office has been in the hands of liberal do-gooders of the William Whitelaw/Timothy Raison sort. In such circumstances how can the police be expected to do their job properly?

If law and order are to be restored in this land, a "short sharp shock" needs to be administered. The first casualty of such a policy must be Mr. Whitelaw himself. He must go.

LABOUR COUNCIL IN LOONYLAND

Black councillor jumps to top of housing list

IN KEEPING with the tradition that Soviet states "look after their own", the far left wing-controlled Brent Council in North West London has allocated a council flat to one of its members, Merle Amory, ahead of a waiting list of over 10,000 ordinary local folk.

Merle Amory is a 'socialist' and is Black. The combined family income that she shares with her schoolteacher husband, Paul Franklin, is £13,000 a year – easily enough to get a mortgage on a private property.

Yet up till recently the two were living in a 'licensed squat' in Willesden Green run by the Brent People's Housing Association. Local authorities allow such groups to take over run-down properties, known as 'short-life accommodation'.

Brent, which has become one of Britain's 'socialist republics', was also recently in the news as a result of a council scheme to dole out £80,000 of the hard-pressed local ratepayers' money to finance a scheme to train four Blacks without any 'O' or 'A' levels as teachers at North London Polytechnic.

ENGLISH CRICKET BOSSES THROW AWAY TEST TO APPEASE PAKISTANIS

RAY HILL comments

A CRICKET TEAM purporting to represent England suffered a humiliating defeat by Pakistan in the so-called "Test Match" at Lords last month. Pakistan won the match by ten wickets while some of England's best cricketers, including Geoff Boycott of Yorkshire and Graham Gooch of Essex were busy hitting centuries for their county teams.

Bob Willis, England's captain and by far their best fast bowler, was absent through injury and was sadly missed. The second best fast bowler in the country, Chris Old, was, along with Boycott and Gooch, absent because, incredible as it may seem, the Pakistanis told the English cricket authorities that they may not be considered for England!

One does not have to be a cricket fan, or for that matter terribly interested in politics, to cringe with embarrassment at the craven, weak-kneed English cricket supremos who surrendered to such pressure from the indisciplined, ill-mannered Pakistanis, whom even the BBC has been forced to criticise for their manifest lack of sportsmanship.

The objection to certain players by the Pakistanis and, before them the Indians, was based upon the fact that these players had actually dared to travel to South Africa and play cricket there. It seems that it is all right for millionaire industrialists like Harry Oppenheimer of Anglo-American to rake in the profits from South Africa (probably because he is, if you believe it, a "socialist"). It is also quite acceptable for Barclays Bank to make its profits there, but if you play cricket (or football) there then, according to our glorious "free press" you are taking "blood money".

'TRIUMPH'

As was inevitable, Pakistan's victory over the scratch XI representing England has been described by the BBC as "an historic triumph".

Another interesting feature of this match is that the BBC constantly referred to "the thousands of Pakistan supporters in the crowd." Unless Pakistan is a very wealthy country and brought over these thousands of supporters with them, we must assume that these people live here. But surely they are British aren't they? Or am I, perhaps, being a little naive?

To finish this report with a little good news, the tour of both Indian and Pakistani teams was first and foremost a profit orientated venture. The cricket authorities, mostly Tories, were happy to sacrifice, not only the unfortunate cricketers who had earned the disapproval of the Indians and Pakistanis, but of course principle as well. The good news is that the fans voted with their feet and the tours resulted in a fat loss!

THUS SPEAKS THE ORACLE

"War springs from the love and loyalty which should be offered to God being applied to some God-substitute, one of the most dangerous being nationalism."

– Dr. Runcie, Archbishop of Canterbury preaching in St. Paul's Cathedral during the Falkland Islands Commemoration Service

YOUR LETTERS

Sir,–"Frontiersman" reports that the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys claims that 5 per-cent of the population is "coloured." He seems to have fallen for the old trick – who is or is not coloured? Are Greeks, Turks, Iranians, Southern Irish, Jews, Arabs, Chinese, Vietnamese or many of the people of other nationalities now living in Britain classed as "coloured" for a census? I think not. Non-coloured immigrants, just like coloured ones, are changing our society and pushing us Britons to one side in their quest for Lebensraum. So let's stop talking about "coloured" immigrants and start talking about "immigrants and their descendants." The proportion of immigrants now in our country is at least 12 per-cent. It's later than you think.

A. CLARK
Cheshunt, Herts.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Mr. Clark makes a valid point but he is wrong when he accuses "Frontiersman" of falling "for the old trick." "Frontiersman" made it clear that he was referring to claims made by the OPCS about the number of coloured people in Britain. He shares Mr. Clark's concern with the large number of non-coloured, non-Anglo Saxon people who are being allowed to settle in our country.

Sir,–While I sympathise with the view expressed in last month's editorial that IRA terrorists who murder our soldiers should, if caught, receive mandatory death sentences, I'm not happy that death sentences should be applied dependent upon the status of the victim. The frequent suggestion that capital punishment should be restored only for the murderers of soldiers, policemen and prison officers seems to imply that such people, worthy as they undoubtedly are, are considered to be in some way more valuable than the rest of the population. In my opinion capital punishment should be restored for all premeditated murders.

Having said that, there is one section of society which is far more vulnerable than those to whom I've referred above, and who urgently require the protection of mandatory death sentences. I refer to children.

The recent spate of child murders makes it imperative that those who perpetrate these vile crimes be put down so that they can never strike again, and also to deter those who have it in mind to commit similar crimes. And for good measure a mandatory sentence of life imprisonment should be passed on those monsters found guilty of sexually assaulting or interfering with children. A start should be made by banning the Paedophile Information Exchange.

D. WILLIAMS

DESPITE the fact that Steven Adrian Smith, 31, was known to be chairman of the Paedophile Information Exchange, which wants to legalise sex between adults and children, he was permitted to work for three years at the Home Office. Mr. Smith has now been removed from his post following the disclosure of his membership of PIE in the national press.

BECAUSE of increased lawlessness and violence in Brixton, police may have to drop their low-profile community policing methods adopted as recommended by the Scarman Report. Chief Superintendent Robert Marsh, head of Brixton's uniform division, says that it is now ten times more difficult to arrest someone in the area than it was a year ago. A number of policemen have been injured by black youths in recent weeks, including one officer who received a fractured skull, jaw and two ribs after telling two Blacks not to ride their bicycles on the pavement.

REPATRIATION

BLACKS IN FAVOUR BUT GOVERNMENT NOT INTERESTED

FOLLOWING last Summer's appalling race riots, there was a fresh public outcry in support of the massed repatriation of Britain's Coloured immigrants. The Government, however, opposed such an idea, saying that to send Coloured people away from this country against their will would be 'undemocratic' and 'inhumane'.

Now evidence has come to light which shows that the Government does not want to relieve Britain of its immigrant and race problems even by persuading the Coloureds to go voluntarily.

An immigrant organisation called the 'West Indian Movement' has conducted surveys which have established that more than half of the Blacks in this country would willingly resettle in the West Indies or Africa if the Government gave them assistance to do so.

MAJORITY WANTS TO GO

The organisation, founded in 1978 by a Mr. Michael Williams, has handed out 1,300 questionnaires to Blacks in the streets, churches and clubs of 15 cities in Britain. From these questionnaires 800 replies have been received, with the vast majority of those replying affirming that they believed that Blacks had no future in the country and that they would willingly leave if assisted.

When figures for assistance came up, the average view was that an acceptable sum would be £5,000 for a family of seven, i.e. just over £700 per head.

New Frontier believes that voluntary resettlement is inadequate to deal with Britain's race problem and that a sum of £700 per head in assistance is too generous anyway. But supposing that the scheme approved by those questioned in the surveys were to be accepted by the Government, it would be a step in the right direction and would cost the country much less than it is going to lose in the long run if the race problem is allowed to fester.

GOVERNMENT DOESN'T WANT TO KNOW

But the Government has shown not the slightest sign of favouring any such scheme and the Commission for Racial Equality, a government-sponsored body asked by the West Indian Movement for a grant to enlarge the scope of its survey, has indicated that no such grant is likely to be forthcoming.

None of this causes us any surprise. We have said for a long time that both Government and Opposition parties would not resolve Britain's race problem even if they could; they want Britain to become multi-racial as a matter of policy, and if offered the chance to rid the country of racial trouble with the free co-operation of Coloured immigrants would still refuse.

Let no-one ever again trust Tory leaders when, to get White votes on the cheap, they talk of the danger of Britain being 'swamped' by the immigrants!

WHAT IS A RACIALIST?

ONE of our readers has drawn attention to the indiscriminate use of the words "racist" and "racialist" by the press and broadcasting media. New Frontier agrees that the indiscriminate use of both words is unfortunate because there is a great need to differentiate between those people, like ourselves, who recognise the inherent physical, psychological and cultural characteristics that undoubtedly separate one race from another, and those people who espouse a mindless hatred for people of other races. In every issue of New Frontier we express our opposition to race hatred.

All too often both words are used in a pejorative sense and there clearly is a need to define what is meant by them. One point to note is that those who believe in the equality of the races and the absence of any differences between them call themselves "multiracialists". If it is considered reprehensible to be a "racialist", how much more reprehensible it must be to be a "*multi*racialist"!

Joking aside, we believe that in order to avoid confusion in the future, lexicographers and the publishers of dictionaries should define the two words as follows:—

RACIST. A person who, without reason, hates people belonging to races other than his own.

RACIALIST. A person who believes that races have distinctive physical, psychological and cultural characteristics determined mainly by hereditary factors.

New Frontier* will send this article to Britain's leading dictionary publishers in the hope that they may agree to re-define the words along the lines that we have proposed above. In the meantime we will call ourselves "racialists" and we will use the term "racist" to describe those people who simply hate other races.

ONE MORE ARGUMENT FOR REPATRIATION

This is the face of Lucy Giles, a 73-year-old – after she was savagely beaten up by two young Blacks when they raided her flat in Brixton last month. Police who saw her injuries said that this photo was totally inadequate to testify to their full extent. Lucy is lucky still to be alive.

TALKING POINTS

by FRONTIERSMAN

THE VIGILANTES

BIZARRE

One of the more bizarre happenings during recent weeks is the news that Croydon Black People's Action Committee has set up a vigilante patrol to "prevent trouble" in Thornton Heath, the area in which motorcyclist Terry May was brutally murdered by rampaging black thugs 14 months ago. The vigilante group claims that its members are experts in "martial arts" and its spokesman, Mr. Feni Adelaja, says: "We intend to do the job the police are not doing but will cooperate with them." What an impertinence! Who do these comedians think they are? Don't they realise that the best way that they could "prevent trouble" in our country is by persuading coloured people of all hues to leave these shores once and for all?

WELL JUDGED

One of the more sensible legal judgements made in recent times was the decision by the Appeal Court that the headmaster who refused to allow a pupil to wear a turban was not guilty of racial discrimination. I entirely agree with the judgement, but it prompts me to enquire why, if it is not discriminatory to ban turbans in schools, should Sikh motorcyclists be allowed to wear turbans instead of crash helmets when riding their machines? It is high time that either the crash helmet law be repealed or Sikhs be made to wear helmets like the rest of the motorcycling population. The law as it stands discriminates against the indigenous population of these islands.

KNAVISH TRICKS

I'm not surprised that some of our more trendy clergymen have been up to their knavish tricks again. Their proposal that the National Anthem should be watered down by deleting such passages as

Scatter our enemies,
And make them fall;
Confound their politics,
Frustrate their knavish tricks . . .

is only to be expected from these pacifists whose liberal sympathies are opposed to the very idea that we should ever defend ourselves, and are totally at variance with the martial sentiments of yesteryear. What does surprise me is that so mediocre a tune as the National Anthem should continue to be considered suitable for use on State occasions, particularly as some music authorities believe that it was composed by a foreigner, possibly George Frederick Handel. It is surely time that a great rousing tune and patriotic song should replace the National Anthem. We have such an anthem written by a very great British composer. Edward Elgar's Pomp and Circumstance March No. 1, better known as "Land of Hope and Glory" is, in my opinion, a song that can be sung with more gusto and patriotic fervour than the rather colourless and pedestrian "God Save the Queen".

ARCHBISHOP RUNCIE
Typical of 'trendy' clergy

FILTHY LUCRE

And while we are on the subject of trendy clergymen, it occurs to me that seldom have the churches come in for so much criticism as they have done lately. It is well deserved and long overdue. The anti-British attitude of so many church leaders during the Falklands crisis; the pitiful service in St. Paul's to commemorate those who died in the fighting; the disgraceful sermon by Dr. Runcie, Archtwerp of Canterbury; the attempts to water down the National Anthem; the antics of the vicar who, for a publicity gimmick, spent a week on his church tower; the pacifism of trendier-than-thou clerics like Monsignor Bruce Kent and Bishop Guazzelli; the support for pot-smoking "Rastafarians" by prelates like Bishop Leo McCartie of the Catholic Commission for Racial Justice; the vigorous support for queers by so many clergymen; and the support for terrorists by such "Christian" organisations as the World Council of Churches and the Catholic Institute for International Relations are hardly likely to increase the popularity of the churches and have succeeded only in confusing many of the faithful.

ARCHBISHOP MARCINKUS
Deeply involved

However, what I find equally disconcerting about modern churchmen is their obsession with the making of money. The priest in my own parish spends much of his time organising bingo sessions and frequently devotes a large part of his newsletter to publishing a balance sheet. Clergymen, besides being pacifists and advocates of race-mixing, fast seem to be taking on the rôle of entrepreneurs. Nowhere is this concern with filthy lucre by churchmen more apparent than in the so-called Marcinkus affair. After the scandal culminating in the death in London of Italian banker Robert Calvi, it transpired that Archbishop Paul Marcinkus, president of the Vatican Bank, was deeply involved in the affair. It has even been rumoured that the Vatican Bank helped to finance the Argentines to enable them to purchase Exocet missiles. Whether this is true or not I do not know. What I do know is that the Founder of the Christian Church would never have countenanced the setting up of church banks.

COMMON MARKET COMMENT

by ANTI-MARKETEER

WHOSE BENEFIT?

MANY Britons must wonder who is supposed to benefit from membership of the EEC. Certainly it doesn't seem to be the ordinary people living in the member states. New Frontier has frequently referred to the fact that commodities like milk, butter, meat, cheese and wine produced in the EEC are often sold much more cheaply in non-EEC countries than they are in the Community itself. We are not very surprised, therefore, to learn that thousands of tons of EEC butter are being sold at knock-down prices in oil-rich countries like Saudi Arabia and Kuwait. Nevertheless, it seems to us utterly incredible that butter should go for 55p a pound in Arab countries when it costs the British housewife approximately £1 a pound. As one "Euro"-MP put it: "We are penalised twice over: first by high prices at home, and then through taxes for subsidies which our own people are not allowed to enjoy."

THEIR BENEFIT?

BUT some Britons do regard the EEC as potentially beneficial. Two SDP MPs, Tom McNally and John Roper, have been sounding out Mr. Piet Dankert, President of the European Parliament, in an attempt to persuade him that the SDP should be eligible for some of the money made available to "established" political parties during "Euro"-elections. In particular they want to make sure that the SDP gets some of the Euro-gravy in time for the elections to be held in 1984. However, their case is weak because so far not one "MEP" has defected to the SDP. Without a single member in the Euro-parliament, how can any party be regarded as "established"? No doubt some convenient formula will be arrived at to ensure that the SDP acquires the necessary credentials long before the elections are held!

ROY JENKINS
Why should his party get Euro-money?

BNP to fight 50 seats in next General Election

THE BRITISH NATIONAL PARTY announced earlier this month a plan to contest 50 seats in the next General Election.

The plan has been conceived essentially as a publicity campaign for the party, with the primary objective of the campaign being to earn the 5 minutes TV and radio broadcasting time that is normally accorded to parties standing 50 candidates.

BNP Leader John Tyndall, in announcing the plan to local party officials, made it clear that it was not expected that the party's candidates would obtain many votes. Recent past experiences, he said, had demonstrated that the time is not yet ripe for British Nationalism to win massed electoral support, and members of the party should not be deluded into hoping for results in the election that were far beyond the party's capacity to achieve at this time or in the near future. Members should view the election campaign for what it is intended to be: a big publicity drive to make the party known to a larger section of the British public and to win new recruits to assist the party in the next stage of its development.

It is vital, Mr. Tyndall said, that party members are thoroughly versed in the objectives of the exercise, and that the error is not made that has been made in the past of building up exaggerated expectations of votes to be won which would result in disappointment on the day, when these expectations were not realised.

The election plan has been formulated in accordance with the policy of the BNP of not making an over-commitment of effort and resources towards elections at the present stage of its growth as a party and in the present political climate. A recent feasibility study has indicated that it is well within the party's capacity to contest a substantially greater number of seats than the 50 decided upon. This, however, would almost certainly not result in any greater allocation of broadcasting time, and would therefore involve a wastage of effort.

Past experience has also established that very little extra benefit has been derived from the posting of a printed election address to every home in the constituencies being fought. The party therefore will not make it a condition to its branches that they produce and send out such an address; other means will be employed to make candidates and their policies known to the electorate, thus greatly reducing the financial outlay needed for each local campaign.

For the party to contest 50 seats in the coming General Election within 2 years of its formation will be a considerable achievement, Mr. Tyndall said, and a great credit to all those who had worked to put the party on the map.

NOTE: What has been said here about the capacity of the British National Party to contest 50 or more seats in the next General Election applies as long as the deposit required for each candidate contesting a seat is £150. In the event of Parliament acting between now and the election to introduce legislation that would substantially increase the deposit, this plan would have to be reviewed.

NORTHERN MARCH: SEPTEMBER 25th

British National Party units in the North of England will be combining to hold a march through a Yorkshire city – it is hoped York – on Saturday, September 25th.

All members wishing to take part should contact their local branches for details.

New Frontier, though it believes in racial differences, opposes race-hatred. All those who oppose multi-racialism should attack the politicians who promote it, not the immigrants, who are merely its victims.

New Welsh group

The exodus from the old National Front to the British National Party continues. Last month the West Wales group of the NF, based in Carmarthen, crossed over to the BNP.

The group had been considering their move for some time. Last year indication was received that they were about to come over to the New National Front (since merged with the BNP) and an announcement was made to this effect which proved premature. Now, however, the group has definitely taken the plunge and the first batch of membership applications has been received. An official BNP group has now been instituted under the leadership of Mr. Ron Davies.

WHAT WE STAND FOR

- The return of leadership and statesmanship to British affairs.
- A government that will put British interests first.
- British withdrawal from the European Common Market.
- Closer links with the White Commonwealth.
- Protection of British industry by the exclusion of foreign manufactured goods from Britain.
- A sane financial system which will give to the people the purchasing power to buy the goods they produce.
- The revival of British farming.
- British ownership and control of British industry and resources.
- A clamp-down on social security spongers and the restoration of the incentive to work.
- An end to immigration and a start to repatriation.
- British support of the Whites in South Africa.
- An end to financial aid to black dictatorships.
- The strengthening of Britain's defences.
- Tougher treatment of criminals.
- The smashing of the IRA, the death penalty for terrorists and firm support for the Loyalist majority in Northern Ireland.
- Repeal of the laws permitting Abortion and Homosexuality and a general toughening up of legislation against the promotion of obscenity in the media.
- The elimination of Communism in Britain, in the mass media, in the factory and in the schoolroom.
